

The Golden Gate Audubon Field Trips Committee plans to continue our program of “big” trips to birding destinations outside the Bay Area. We know that many of you already travel all over the globe on birding and natural history trips, and we would like to gain from your experience in order to help plan our future trips. We very much appreciate your help in answering the following questions:

1) How often do you travel outside California to go birding?

- More than once a year
- About once a year
- Once every few years
- Never

2) What are your three favorite birding destinations outside of California?

3) What professional guides/tour companies do you recommend?

4) Are there any professional guides/tour companies that you do not recommend?

5) Where would you like to go birding on future trips?

6) Would you be interested in going with a small group from Golden Gate Audubon?

7) How long should the trips be?

8) In 2009 we are considering trips to the following destinations. Please indicate if you might be interested in:

- Belize (two-week trip with Larry Liese, who led the Copper Canyon trips in 2007)
- Veracruz (for fall raptor migration)
- Kenya/East Africa (birds and game trip)

9) Do you have preferences for the type of trip (check any that apply):

- Birding only
- Birding and other natural history
- Birding and local culture
- Birding and photography

10) Please add any comments that would help in our future plans.
